

COUNTERFUTURES

Left thought & practice Aotearoa

FOUR

2017

Counterfutures 4

2017

Counterfutures 4, Special Issue Editors: Jack Foster, Murdoch Stephens, Dylan Taylor, Amanda Thomas

Editor: Dylan Taylor

Book Review Editors: Chamsy el-Ojeili, Warwick Tie

Editorial Board: Sue Bradford, Tim Corballis, Chamsy el-Ojeili, Sean Phelan, Dylan Taylor, Warwick Tie

Editorial Advisory Board: Ozan Alakavuklar, Maria Bargh, Anita Brady, Cassandra Barnett, Sophie Bond, Shannon Brincat, Colin Cremin, Lincoln Dahlberg, Karen Davis, Shiv Ganesh, Sandra Grey, Peter Howland, Campbell Jones, Dougal McNeill, Pala Molisa, Brett Nicholls, David Parker, Helen Potter, Brian Roper, Murdoch Stephens, Giovanni Tiso, Cindy Zeiher

Editorial Support: Mark Derby, Graeme Whimp

Graphic Design: Sml Fort Design

Design Support: Eun Sun Jeong

Web Design and Build: Tim Corballis

Print Support: Murdoch Stephens

ISSN 2463 – 5340

Published bi-annually by Counterfutures. Post: c/- School of Social and Cultural Studies, Victoria University of Wellington, PO Box 600, Wellington 6140, New Zealand.

Printed, using ECO100% 115gsm recycled paper, at Rebel Press, Trades Hall, Vivian Street, Te Aro, Wellington, Aotearoa

Editorial

Navigating activism and academia 13

Jack Foster, Murdoch Stephens, Dylan Taylor, and Amanda Thomas

Interview

'We have come too far not to go further' 27

Dylan Taylor and Amanda Thomas interview Moana Jackson

Articles

Student activism against the neocolonial, 53

neoliberal university: Exploring a sociology of absences, emergences, and hidden fires

Marcelle C. Dawson

What divides? The 'academic-activist divide' 85
and the equality of intelligence

Shannon Walsh

Social-model mothers: Disability, advocacy, 107
and activism

Gretchen A. Good, Awhina Hollis-English, Ally Attwell, Anna Dickson, Anita Gibbs, Janice Gordon, and Joanna M. T. Taylor

The value of work and the future of 137
the Left

Campbell Jones

Interventions

Community economies: Responding to questions of scale, agency, and Indigenous connections in Aotearoa New Zealand 167

Gradon Diprose, Kelly Dombroski, Stephen Healy, and Joanne Waitoa

Pākehā as punisher—dominated conversations on dominant cultures 185

Murdoch Stephens

We don't have to be the building 193

Siân Torrington

Book reviews

Kent: The Big Shift: Rethinking Money, Tax, Welfare and Governance for the Next Economic System 203

Leon Salter interviews Deidre Kent

Harris: The New Zealand Project 213

David Parker

Stanley: The Road to Hell: State Violence against Children in Postwar New Zealand 223

Denise Blake

Contributors

Ally Attwell is a mother, academic, lecturer, and activist. She holds a DipBus from Universal College of Learning (UCOL), a BA in Linguistics from Massey University, and a GradDip Tch (ECE) from University of Canterbury. Ally works at UCOL as an Early Childhood lecturer while studying towards a Masters of Education (Special and Inclusive Education) at the University of Canterbury.

Denise Blake is a lecturer in the School of Psychology at Massey University. She has over 20 years' experience within the alcohol and other drug sector as a consumer, health professional, and researcher, which informs her interest in issues of social justice. She has been involved in research projects investigating domestic violence, the effects of adoption practices within Aotearoa New Zealand, and access to opioid substitution treatment following a disaster. Denise values using collaborative approaches to address complex social issues.

Marcelle C. Dawson teaches sociology at the University of Otago. She is a member of the editorial advisory board of Social Movement Studies and serves as Vice-President of the International Sociological Association's Research Committee 47 (Social Classes and Social Movements).

Anna Dickson is a freelance science and general non-fiction writer and editor, a counsellor in private practice, and does contract teaching and marking for Massey University. She has a PhD in science communication from Australian National University, and a postgraduate diploma in counselling and guidance from Massey University.

Gradon Diprose is a human geographer working in the School of Health and Social Sciences at the Open Polytechnic. He is a member of the Community Economies Collective and does collaborative research with community groups drawing on feminist and participatory approaches.

Kelly Dombroski is a member of the Community Economies Collective, researching and teaching in the areas of feminist economic and political geography, particularly around the themes of care, embodied knowledge, and the possibilities of postcapitalist and postdevelopment politics. She works in the geography department at the University of Canterbury Te Whare Wānanga o Waitaha.

Jack Foster studies sociology at Victoria University of Wellington. He is currently researching voter turnout and decline in Aotearoa New Zealand.

Anita Gibbs teaches criminology, social work, and sociology at the University of Otago. She became an adoptive parent to two boys in 2007, both of whom live with foetal alcohol spectrum disorders (FASD). Her current research and practice interests include FASD; transcultural parenting; adopted children's rights; autoethnography; and interventions and support for families with children who have complex needs.

Gretchen Good teaches Rehabilitation Studies at Massey University. She is mother to two children who have Down syndrome. Her research focusses on activity, independence, and life satisfaction in adults with and without impairments; disaster preparation for disabled children and adults; and adoption and disability.

Janice Gordon is CEO of Phoenix Supported Employment Services. Her awards include: 2007 EEO Trust Award Small-Medium business Award for Work/Life Balance; 2002 life membership of Parent to Parent for her notable services to developing programs, networks and resources for families of children with disabilities; and the Civic Honour Award from the Palmerston North City Council for 20 twenty years' service to the community (2003).

Stephen Healy is a Senior Research Fellow at the institute for Culture and Society, Western Sydney University. He is co-author of Take Back the Economy: An Ethical Guide for Transforming our Communities and a founding member of the Community Economies Collective. His approach to action research draws on Marxian theory.

Awhina Hollis-English (Ngāti Porou, Ngāti Kahungunu ki Wairoa) is a lecturer in the School of Social Work at Massey University. She is a registered social worker and her research focuses on Māori Social Workers in Schools, Puaote-ata-tu and Māori methods of practice and coping within social service organisations.

Moana Jackson has tribal affiliations with Ngāti Kahungunu, Rongomaiwahine, and Ngāti Porou. He is a highly regarded lawyer throughout Aotearoa and internationally

Campbell Jones teaches at the University of Auckland and is a researcher at the Left think tank Economic and Social Research Aotearoa, where he is involved in projects on work, finance, housing, political organisation, and economic planning. He is currently writing a book on the concept of work.

David Parker was born and raised in Lancashire, England and came to Aotearoa in 1988. He is an activist, writer, editor, and educator. Currently, David is co-chair of the Kotare Trust, a centre for Tiriti-based radical social change education.

Deirdre Kent is a long-time activist from Aotearoa New Zealand. She started NZ Banking Reform campaign group, and was a founding trustee of the Living Economies Educational Trust. After forming a Transition Town group and a Timebank in Ōtaki she co-founded the New Economics Party, a group who works on policy combining monetary reform and land tax.

Leon Salter is a media and communications PhD student from the UK, now based in Wellington. His research investigates the impact of neoliberal discourse on education and activist's strategic responses to it, this has involved interviewing those involved in sustaining an alternative educational philosophy in Aotearoa New Zealand.

Murdoch Stephens leads the Doing Our Bit campaign to double New Zealand's refugee quota, to be the first increase since 1987. He is in the process of defending his PhD, undertaken at Massey University, on how contemporary philosophers who value doubt and criticality negotiate their political actions and belief in climate change. He is also editor of Lawrence & Gibson publishing and helped co-edit Counterfutures 4.

Dylan Taylor lectures sociology at Victoria University of Wellington. He is editor of Counterfutures, and a researcher for Economic and Social Research Aotearoa.

Joanna M. T. Taylor is a lifelong student of people, relationships, and human behaviour. After completing two degrees in Psychology at Massey University in the 1980s, she fulfilled various roles working with people while raising a family of six children, one of whom is an adult diagnosed on the autism spectrum disorder spectrum. Joanna gained her registration as a Psychologist early this year. She works in the Health Psychology field in the Manawatu.

Amanda Thomas is a lecturer in Environmental Studies at Victoria University of Wellington. She was on the organising committee for the Social Movements, Resistance, and Social Change Conference in 2016, and is a guest editor of this issue.

Siân Torrington makes art, poetry, and performance pieces. She is currently interested in the expression of gender diversity, sexuality, and social history through multi media projects. Siân graduated with an MFA with distinction from Massey University in 2010, has had numerous solo and group shows, and works from a studio in Wellington.

Joanne Waitoa (Ngāti Porou, Ngāti Kahungunu ki Wairoa) is a PhD candidate and kaupapa Māori researcher from Te Kawa a Māui at Victoria University, Wellington. Her thesis explores the diversity of community based Māori political participation which exists outside of parliament. She is a member of the Community Economies Research Network

Shannon Walsh is a doctoral candidate at the University of Auckland, and a researcher for Economic and Social Research Aotearoa. His work focuses on critical theory, continental philosophy, and the critique of capitalist ideology. He is currently writing a thesis on the concept of innovation.

If you like what you have read, please subscribe or donate.

COUNTERFUTURES

Left thought & practice Aotearoa

© Copyright Counterfutures 2017