Contributors

Josiah Banbury is a tutor and sessional lecturer at the department of Human Services and Social Work at the University of Canterbury. His Masters thesis focused on student housing in post-earthquake Christchurch. Josiah's academic interests include sociology, housing, mobility, critical urban theory and social policy.

Sue Bradford is a community-based activist and former Green MP. Her 2014 doctoral thesis A major left wing think tank in Aotearoa: an impossible dream or a call to action? instigated the development of Economic and Social Research Aotearoa (ESRA), for whom she is now Project Coordinator.

Tim Corballis is a Wellington novelist, essayist and art writer. He is on the Editorial Board of Counterfutures.

Anna Fielder grew up in Sheffield in the north of England, and currently lives in West Auckland with her three children. She has worked as a midwife and a researcher, and is now a PhD student in Sociology at the University of Auckland. Anna has been involved in various forms of left activism and in projects around the politics of women's reproductive health. She works on a voluntary basis for ESRA as a Researcher, and is also Secretary of ESRA.

Brodie Fraser is completing a Master's of Political Science, looking at how high-school aged LGBTQI+ people participate in politics. Her interests include inequality, feminist and queer theory, and New Zealand politics. She enjoys spending time in nature and daydreaming about the softness of moss.

Kassie Hartendorp is an activist based in Te Whanganui-a-Tara. She is engaged in a range of work with young people in the LGBTQI+, Māori and Pasifika communities, engaging with such groups as Tīwhanawhana, BOX Oceania and the Kava Club.

Dougal McNeill teaches in the English Programme, Victoria University of Wellington, and is a member of the International Socialist Organisation.

David Parker was born and raised in Lancashire, England. He came to Aotearoa/ in 1988. He is an activist, writer, editor and educator, and works as a postgraduate learning advisor at Auckland University of Technology. Currently David is co-chair of the Kotare Trust, a centre for Tiriti-based radical social change education, and is a member of the ESRA Steering Committee.

Sean Phelan teaches communication and media studies at Massey University, Wellington. He is the author of Neoliberalism, Media and the Political, which was recently published in paperback. He is on the Editorial Board of Counterfutures.

Leon Salter is a PhD candidate in Communications at Massey University, researching continuing resistance to the neoliberalization of school-sector education in New Zealand. Leon was a member of the organizing team for the Social Movements conference in Wellington last year, and has been actively involved in the anti-TTP movement in New Zealand, together with Stop the War in the UK.

Dylan Taylor teaches sociology at Victoria University of Wellington. He is editor of Counterfutures, and an ESRA Researcher and Trustee. His first monograph Social Movements and Democracy in the 21st Century is coming out later this year.

Warwick Tie teaches sociology at Massey University and is a Researcher for ESRA. He also chairs the ESRA Board of Trustees and sits on the Counterfutures Editorial Board. Looking forward into 2017, he will be convening the Social Movements, Resistance and Social Change IV conference (co-hosted by ESRA and Massey University).

Keith Tudor is Professor of Psychotherapy and currently Head of the School of Public Health & Psychosocial Studies at Auckland University of Technology. He is a widely published author in the field of psychotherapy, and of publications that take a critical and radical perspective on the subject, discipline, profession and professionalisation of psychotherapy. He is the Editor of Psychotherapy and Politics International and a Fellow of the Critical Institute. His latest book is Conscience and Critic, and he is currently working on Psychotherapy: A Critical Examination.

Cindy Zeiher is a lecturer in the School of Language, Political and Social Sciences at the University of Canterbury, Christchurch, New Zealand. Her interests and publications are in the areas of critical, social and political theories as well as Lacanian psychoanalysis, feminism and subjectivity. She is currently co-editing a collection with Todd McGowan, Can Philosophy Love? Reflections and Encounters, and is co-authoring, Silence: Holding the Voice Hostage, with Ed Pluth.
